As Managing Partner of the Lackenbach Siegel firm for over two decades, and now Senior Counsel of Nolte Lackenbach Siegel, Mr. Aronson has witnessed many changes in the practice of Intellectual Property law generally and significant transformations of law firm operation.

With the expansion of designer trademarks and licensing in the 1970's, Mr. Aronson worked in the trademark department and was responsible for iconic designer licensing during its exponential growth during that time period. He then moved into the litigation department as the infringements and piracy of designer brands became prevalent, eventually heading the litigation department for many years until being named Managing Partner, in view of his broad experience in all facets of the firm's operations, and considering his exposure to different IP firms.

Mr. Aronson was an important part of the metamorphosis of Lackenbach and its merger with the patent powerhouse and tech-savvy Nolte IP law firm that melded cutting edge law firm technology with the global nature of Lackenbach's client base and its various legal departments, creating a national footprint of offices in the US.

Most significantly, Mr. Aronson orchestrated the unique evolution of staffing policies which focused on hiring only with very experienced IP attorneys. Nolte Lackenbach Siegel created sub-specialization by attorney, permitting staffing matters with fewer attorneys and completing assignments in less time, resulting in lower fees than typically charged by large firm counterparts. The unique law firm business model, first introduced by Mr. Aronson 30 years ago, has been and remains unique, attractive to discriminating clients, and has been eminently successful.

Mr. Aronson prides himself in being a contract author to LexisNexis, the largest publisher in the IP field, in connection with four publications, as well as being The Toy Book legal columnist. He boasts a long list of published articles and is a frequent Seminar speaker, as well as having been a featured radio show authority on IP law.
